

Andrew Katsaros, Inspector General, FTC

In November 2018, the Federal Trade Commission approved Andrew Katsaros to be its 6th Inspector General. Andrew joined the FTC Office of Inspector General from the Office of Inspector General at the U.S. Department of Commerce, where he served as an Assistant Inspector General for the Office of Audit and Evaluation. Andrew previously was the Assistant Director for Audit and Review for the Executive Office for United States Attorneys at the Department of Justice. Prior to that, he held several positions at the U.S. Agency for International Development Office of Inspector General, including Director of Financial Audits, and in the Office of Inspector General at the Department of Defense. Andrew is a graduate of Western Michigan University and a Certified Public Accountant.