

Larra Clark serves as Deputy Director for both the Public Library Association (PLA) and the American Library Association's (ALA) Public Policy & Advocacy Office. Her portfolio includes broadband access and adoption, public library data and research, strategic communications, and national initiatives and partnerships. Her career spans 22 years managing library communications, policy, and research following a decade in non-profit public affairs, government relations, and print journalism. She received her library master's degree from the University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign.