

Emily Cranston is a Senior Threat Intelligence Analyst at FireEye focusing on cyber threats to the healthcare and U.S. government sectors. Previously, Emily worked for the Multi-State Information Sharing and Analysis Center (MS-ISAC) where she worked collaboratively with Department of Homeland Security's Fusion Centers nationwide. Prior to that, she worked as a Criminal Intelligence Information Specialist with the New England State Police Information Network (NESPIN), a Regional Information Sharing System (RISS) funded by the Department of Justice's Bureau of Justice Assistance. Emily holds a Master's in Business Administration (MBA) from the University at Albany, with a certification in Information Technology Management, as well as a Bachelor's Degree in Intelligence Studies from Mercyhurst University.