Emily Wolfteich is a Senior Industry Analyst at GovExec, where her research and analysis examines how technology can power public service. With a specific interest in the interplay between emerging tech, equity, and mission delivery, Emily works with stakeholders across both the private and public sectors to hone in on the issues and solutions that help government agencies make the best use of their talents and reach their constituents effectively and efficiently.

Prior to joining GovExec, Emily received her Master's degree in Development Practice from Trinity College Dublin, and spent six years in the international development sector, where her research and analysis supported nonprofits, think tanks, and intergovernmental organizations based in Europe and Africa.