

Brandon Bonar is the Cisco Collaboration Manager for the Department of Defense and National Security Operation. He and his team design and build solutions that enable customers to communicate more efficiently within their organizations.

Brandon graduated from Texas Tech University in 1993 with a Bachelors degree in Marketing and General Business. After college, he went to work for a local IBM business partner. In that role, he designed marketing plans and programs to help them grow into the largest IBM partner in North America. After being in that position for eight years, he left to join Cisco Systems. While at Cisco, he has held positions covering a number of different customers including Commercial, Enterprise, and Public Sector.

Brandon is very active with customers and participates on numerous local technology boards, including local South Texas school districts to make sure they understand the benefits of technology.

In his personal life Brandon is very involved in his local community. He is an active member of his church and a number of youth programs including YMCA, Little League, and the San Antonio Stock Show and Rodeo. Brandon and his family reside in San Antonio, TX.
