

Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist Jonathan Capehart is an opinion writer and member of The Washington Post editorial board. He also hosts the “Cape Up” podcast and is an MSNBC Contributor. Capehart was deputy editorial page editor of the New York Daily News from 2002 to 2004, and served on that paper's editorial board from 1993 to 2000. In 1999, his editorial campaign to save the Apollo Theater in Harlem earned him and the board the Pulitzer Prize for Editorial Writing. In February 2001, he became a policy adviser to Michael Bloomberg in his first campaign for New York City mayor.