

Keri Robinson serves as the program lead for the Rad/Nuc Group within Defense and Homeland Security at Noblis. He brings extensive background with his over 40 years of military, national laboratory and federal support where he focused on the defense, intelligence and homeland security sectors. He leads a team of nationally recognized SMEs supporting multiple activities within the Department of Homeland Security.

Prior to joining Noblis, Mr. Robinson was a principal scientist at Pacific Northwest National Lab (PNNL) as part of the Field Intelligence Element working areas of national security for multiple government agencies. Mr. Robinson is a retired United States Air Force officer executing multiple programs supporting the United State's worldwide nuclear detection mission. He has a Masters in Nuclear Engineering from the Air Force Institute of Engineering and A Bachelor in Nuclear Engineering from the Georgia Institute of Technology.