Kay Murphy has over 25 years of business experience serving both the public and private sectors.   In addition to the Defense industry, she has worked in the industrial sector and utilities, software and consulting.

Her expertise is in advanced analytics and cognitive technology, business intelligence, data warehousing, asset and facility management. Ms. Murphy currently works for IBM in the Global Government Center of Competence, where she is the Worldwide Mission Readiness Leader.

She holds a bachelors degree in Applied Computer Science from Illinois State University, and has a masters degree in National Resource Strategy from National Defense University, where she was a distinguished graduate of the Eisenhower School.