

Virginia Hill serves as the President of Young Government Leaders (YGL) National Board in Washington, DC. In this role, she represents the national organization in the media, spearheads and participates in organizational projects, and has the privilege to speak to audiences of current and prospective government employees.

During her day job, Ginny is a Program Manager for customized leadership programs at the Partnership for Public Service. Moving to the Partnership in February 2015 was a new chapter in her journey to make a positive impact on government; this time from the outside in.

Ginny spent for than 7 years in public service at the National Institutes of Health (NIH), first as a Presidential Management Fellow, and then finding her niche in various workforce development roles in the NIH Office of Human Resources and NIH Clinical Center. She earned her Master of Social Work degree from Louisiana State University.
