

On 6 March 2015 Andrew Hallman was named Deputy Director of CIA for Digital Innovation, responsible for accelerating the integration of digital and cyber capabilities across all of CIA's mission areas.

In his previous assignment since 2013, Deputy Director for Intelligence for Strategic Programs, he assisted with daily leadership of the Directorate of Intelligence and oversight of its people and products, paying special attention to a broad range of enduring initiatives – from analytic transformation and global agility to talent management. From 2011 to 2013, Mr. Hallman served as Assistant Deputy Director of National Intelligence (DNI) for Intelligence Integration, where he helped lead the DNI's efforts to better integrate the Intelligence Community. Before joining ODNI, Mr. Hallman served as the Director of the Office of Transnational Issues (OTI), where he was responsible for leading analysis of global national security challenges and development of advanced analytics.

Prior to leading OTI, he served as intelligence briefer to President Obama. He was Director of the Office of Iraq Analysis in 2007 and 2008, and Deputy Director in 2006 and early 2007. From 2004 to 2006 he led analysis on South Asia, and he served in the CIA's Center for Weapons Intelligence, Nonproliferation and Arms Control from 2001-2004. He was detailed as Executive Assistant to the Director of Intelligence in 2002, after serving in a number of other analytic, operational and policy assignments since entering on duty with the CIA in 1989.

Mr. Hallman earned an MA in international affairs from American University's School of International Service in 1986 and a BA in Public Affairs Management from Michigan State University in 1984.
